THE ABOLITION of Cal-OSHA dominated the legislative experience of 1987. Governor Deukmejian's stunning action early in the year continued as Labor's major public issue throughout the session.

The fact that a program costing less than $7 million a year could be eliminated from a budget of $42 billion in the name of fiscal necessity was immediately opposed by Labor as economically unwise and destructive of the health and safety of California's working people.

While the money was restored by legislative action, the Governor vetoed its inclusion in the multi-billion dollar budget.

Otherwise, the 1987 session was a continuance of the past four years with the Governor signing some AFL-CIO-backed bills and vetoing almost twice as many.

He signed 13 bills supported by the federation in 1987, of which 4 were workers' compensation bills: that require payroll audits to ensure payment of premiums; disseminate information on claims and procedures; repeal the sunset clause on fire fighters' cancer presumption; and add a labor and a management member to the Workers Compensation Insurance Rating Bureau.

Other bills signed make tree spiking a felony; support industrial drug rehabilitation programs; speed IWC wage order procedures; liberalize tax credits for preservation of low-income housing; extend the sunset date on unemployment insurance retraining benefits programs; prohibit discrimination in hospital emergency rooms; and eliminate tax deductions for private clubs which discriminate on the basis of age, sex, race, religion or national origin.

The Governor signed a federation-opposed bill that deprives race-track employees of overtime pay.

In addition to his budget cut that eliminated Cal-OSHA funding for the private sector, the Governor vetoed 23 federation-supported bills, including 7 on worker safety and health.

He also vetoed bills calling for a raise in unemployment insurance benefits from $166 to $181 and legislation affecting public works employment, job training eligibility and benefits, voter registration practices, parental leave, wage claims, wage orders for construction industry workers, protection for seniors from abusive insurance agents and class size in the state's schools.

Fraternally yours,

John F. Henning
