THE LEGISLATIVE pattern of the past six years continued through the 1988 session. Defensive victories were everywhere evident but progress was retarded in terms of the laws that would meet the crises of unemployed and disabled workers.

Too many socially constructive bills perished in fiscal committees because they required funding in the face of a socially indifferent budget. The poorly housed, the poorly fed, the poorly schooled and the aged didn't count.

Still, eighteen bills supported by the federation were signed into law by Governor Deukmejian.

He vetoed twenty-two labor-sponsored bills, some of which would have:

Increased the maximum weekly unemployment insurance benefit from $166 to $181; required the state to develop a plan for child care services; created an advisory Commission on Pay Equity;

Given permanent status to classified employees of school and community college districts after a six months probationary period; eased credit eligibility requirements to promote low income housing;

Provided funding for Cal-OSHA after passage of Proposition 97; and required school, college and university governing boards to consider human and ergonomic factors when selecting office equipment.

Among the eighteen bills the Governor signed into law were those which will:

- Strengthen contractor licensing law by placing stricter limitations on "owner builders" and require licensed contractors to carry a plastic identification card;

- Increase the farm labor contractor bond from $5,000 to $10,000;

- Require public utilities to assist laid-off workers in finding comparable jobs when a nuclear plant is decommissioned;

- Provide written notice by the employer to employees working within a building constructed before 1979 that contains materials composed of asbestos;

- Require the Labor Commissioner to hold a hearing within 120 days after accepting a complaint; and

- Prohibit the Industrial Welfare Commission from holding closed or executive session meetings.

The federation was also successful in defeating eight anti-labor bills, which included promotion of contracting-out public transit systems and sanctioning drug testing for specified drivers.

Fraternally yours,

John F. Henning
