Income of men in 48 professional occupations: 1949 and May 21, 1964
1959; Income of women in 30 professional occupations: 1949 and 1959
Memorandum

A few months ago the Bureau of the Census published a special report on the occupational characteristics of persons in the civilian labor force during the Census Week of 1960. Estimates of the income received in 1959 by individuals in different occupations were included in this report. Similar estimates for 1949 were published in a special report of the 1950 Census.

It occurred to us that many members of the Economics Department might be interested in seeing which of the professional occupations experienced the largest (and smallest) percentage gains in median income and numbers of practitioners between 1949 and 1959. Accordingly, the two attached tables have been prepared.

For technical reasons, some professional groups had to be omitted -- notably, those with less than 3,000 males or females in either year and those that were defined quite differently in the two years. A few other groups had to be combined.

The income figures purport to show the median total income before taxes received by all persons, classified by occupation and sex, who were members of the experienced, civilian labor force during the Census Weeks of 1950 and 1960, and are based on a sample of Census returns (3 1/3% in 1950 and 5% in 1960). The data are subject to error from a distressingly large number of sources: sampling variability and non-response; processing and numeration mistakes by the Census; and faulty memory, misunderstanding of questions, and wilful misrepresentation by respondents. The customary word of caution is, therefore, very much in order.
