Among those questioned were Haakon Chevalie, who had been approached by a vice-consul of the Soviet Union and asked to contact someone at the University of California. That person in turn allegedly was to be asked to contact J. Robert Oppenheimer about atomic research and the atomic bomb. Inquiries into Communist Party membership and Communist organizations in San Francisco. List of Communist Party officials in Alameda County and officers of the Communist Party club.

Volume 34: Open Meeting of the Senate Committee on Un-American Activities, State Building, Los Angeles. Dec. 1, 1947.

This was a hearing on the unauthorized "bugging" of the committee's conference room in the Los Angeles State Building, the Los Angeles Police Department's narcotics squad room in City Hall and three other public offices. According to testimony, a private detective persuaded the telephone company to run five direct telephone lines from his office to the state and city offices. Believing it to be a confidential government operation, the telephone company failed to seek approval from state and city officials. A microphone and amplifier were found at the end of the telephone line in a janitor's closet in Sen. Jack Tenney's conference room, and two loose wires for a bugging device were discovered in the police narcotics bureau at city hall. State narcotics agents became suspicious when information about their raids was leaking out in advance. They requested the search for possible office bugging.
