THE FOLLOWING PAGES tell the almost unfailing annual story of political votes in Sacramento. Democrats vote labor. Republicans vote against labor. There are few exceptions on either side.

Governor Wilson signed 26 labor-supported bills and vetoed 35.

However, the dominant story of last year's session was the budget crisis and how the ultimate settlement affected workers and state services.

The principal victims were the unemployed, seniors and the disabled; children and dependent families; education and health services; dependent local governments; state and local government employees.

Beyond these deprivations was the scandal of the state government being compelled to issue IOUs for employees' salaries and state incurred billings.

Two basic disorders explain California's fiscal chaos:

1. The crippling two-thirds majority vote required for budget passage in Assembly and Senate, the result being that the Republican minority in both houses imprisoned alike the governor and the Democratic majority. California is one of only four states in the nation requiring a super majority budget vote.
2. Republican refusal to tax the sources of personal and corporate wealth sufficient to serve California's socio-economic needs.

And so California continued on the downward path from a once held glory.

Fraternally yours,
