Abstract

The Jeff Allen Collection, 2004-2007, documents the exterior and interior of current and former Christian churches in the Los Angeles County area and a handful of churches in Orange County. Church denominations include Protestantism, Catholicism, Mormonism and Nondenominational. This collection also documents how some churches have changed their denomination and/or demographic over time as noted on church plaques. Some demographics include Korean, Latino, African-American and Samoan Christian churches. There is also a small portion of photos of a wall mural depicting the history of Mexico in Compton.

Physical Location

Housed in the “cold storage” room on LL4 of Central Library.

Biography/History

Jeff Allen was born in 1955 and was a field volunteer for the Los Angeles Central Library Photo Collection under Senior Librarian Caroline Kozo Cole. He predominately took photos of current and former Christian churches throughout the Los Angeles area. Allen also took photos of churches in the Orange County area and of flowers, trees and murals. He did not mind going to “rough” neighborhoods as his mother taught him to not be afraid of people who were different due to language or race but rather to gain a new perspective. He was a Cost Accountant for over thirty years and as of 2013 has retired to Colorado with his wife, Lynn. Allen considers Norwalk, California his hometown. He graduated from Norwalk High School and got his accounting degree from Cal State Fullerton.

Scope and Content

The Jeff Allen Collection, 2004-2007, consists primarily of current and former Christian churches in the Los Angeles County region such as Pasadena, Hollywood, Long Beach, San Gabriel, Compton, Pico Rivera, Gardena, Montebello, Huntington Park, Bell Gardens, Commerce, Cerritos, Downey, Eagle Rock, Boyle Heights, East LA, Little Tokyo, Lincoln Heights, South LA and in Orange Country with cities such as Santa Ana, Los Alamitos and Cypress. Allen also focused on churches along Hooper Avenue in Los Angeles. There is a small portion of photos of a wall mural depicting the history of Mexico in Compton. Almost all of Allen’s photographs document the exterior, interior and location of a church including close-ups of stain glass windows, altars, pews and statues to a full exterior view of the church from across the street. He photographed the church marquees, street signs and cornerstones or plaques placed on the church wall that would document the building’s date of construction or how it was formerly a different religious denomination than the one it is now. After the 1933 Long Beach earthquake many churches were rebuilt and have plaques documenting this. Of the former Christian churches they include current Mini Markets, Buddhist Temples and Jewish Synagogues Nearly every single photograph has the church’s name and address printed or handwritten on the back. Almost the entire collection is devoid of people.

Allen's entire collection consists of 3x5 or 4x6 glossy, color photographs. The last folder in the last box of the collection contains miscellaneous notes about certain churches and a letter of correspondence to former Curator of Photographs, Carolyn Kozo Cole.

Organization and Arrangement

The photographs in this collection have been organized between two sections; catalogued and uncatalogued. The first 2 and half boxes (box 84 – box 86) are photos that have been catalogued or are in the process of being catalogued and have been cherry-picked for digitization. The last 2 and half boxes (box 86 – box 88) are of photos that were not selected for digitization. Within these two sections the photos are organized by church name in no particular alphabetical, chronological or geographical order.

This collection has 5 boxes, each box containing folders 1-4. Each folder contains 60 photographs and are numbered starting with GPC_b84_fl_i1 and ending with GPC_b88_f2_i39 (General Photo Collection_Box88_Folder2_item39) as of February 2013.

The last box (Box 88) has a 5th folder containing miscellaneous notes or letters from Jeff Allen to former Curator of Photographs, Carolyn Kozo Cole, but no photographs. Also includes an envelope with Jeff Allen's mailing address.
